Y O R K

Places of interest include the Yorkshire Museum, the Jorvik Viking Centre, the Castle Museum, the National Railway Museum, the Bar Convent Museum and the York Dungeon. York Minster is world famous, and is well worth a visit. Much of the main shopping area in the city centre is traffic free through the day, so you can window shop or have tea in one of the many teashops without being bothered by fumes.

York operates Park and Ride services, and local buses run frequently through the day on the major routes – they are less frequent in the evenings.

Visually impaired visitors may get advice from York Blind and Partially Sighted Society (tel. 01904 636269).

Information is also available at: <http://www.doherty71.freeseve.co.uk/yorkblind.htm>

For details of transport concessions and facilities to assist people with disabilities, contact Environment and Development Services. Tel: (01904) 613161 ext. 1403.

The York Access Group have published an Access Booklet which complements their web site that informs disabled people and organisations about more specific accessibility to facilities like hotels, restaurants, transport (i.e. taxis and buses), public facilities, popular attractions in York and much more. Information is available at: <http://www.doherty71.freeseve.co.uk/access.htm>

Taxis (All York numbers, prefix with 01904)

ABC Blue Circle Taxis tel: 638787

Ace Taxis tel: 638888

Fleetways tel: 645333

Local Taxis tel: 641341

SOCIOLOGY OF HEALTH AND ILLNESS

2003 PRIZE

The Sociology of Health and Illness Book Prize of £1000 is awarded annually for the book judged to have made an outstanding and unique contribution to medical sociology, published within the past three years. The books listed below, with a paragraph by their nominator, have been short listed for the 2003 prize. The winner will be announced at this conference, prior to the first Plenary, which takes place on Friday 26th September, at 17.20.

We are now seeking nominations for the 2004 prize. We have included a nomination form in your programme, and you can also find further details and a nomination form on the website www.britsoc.co.uk - it's a really quick and simple process, so get thinking and nominating!

Clare Williams, on behalf of the BSA Medical Sociology Group

Busfield, J. Health and Health Care in Modern Britain: Oxford, Oxford University Press, 2002

Nominated by Hannah Bradby

A skilful summary of social, economic and political aspects of health, health needs and health care provision in Britain. In addition to digesting a range of research material and presenting it in an accessible form, the book considers future prospects and dilemmas for health care in Britain, thereby casting well-rehearsed arguments about health inequalities and their causes and possible cures in a new light. The book could be of interest to both the novice and the old hand because it is well written and because it achieves a combination of range and depth.

Horwitz, A. Creating Mental Illness Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 2002

Nominated by Jon Gabe

Allan Horwitz's Creating Mental Illness is the most important book in the sociology of mental health in a decade.

Horwitz's main argument is that modern psychiatry has become what he calls 'diagnostic psychiatry' and this has led to a proliferation of mental illness diagnostic categories (especially after DSM-III). Horwitz argues that only symptoms that reflect (psychological) internal dysfunctions, which are deemed to be inappropriate and are universal categories of the human species, are true mental diseases. There are few disorders that meet this criterion, schizophrenia, bipolar illness and some clinical depression (most of which were previously termed psychoses). All other current psychiatric disorders are expectable responses to stress, social deviance or 'problems in living' (to resurrect an old phrase). Modern psychiatry has given these disorders medical diagnoses (PTSD, ADHD, dissociative disorder, OCD, etc.) although they are not mental diseases. Thus modern psychiatry and psychiatric epidemiology overstate the amount of mental illness in society.

This is an important and controversial argument. Horwitz impressively integrates findings from history, sociology, epidemiology, biology and psychology to support his argument. While some may not agree that it is possible to make the clear distinction between 'real' mental illness and 'extended' diagnostic disorders (my term), he is surely right about the proliferation of mental illness.

Horwitz suggests this expansion is both a result and reflection of the rise of diagnostic psychiatry, the latest incarnation of psychiatric advancement. Using specific cases (e.g., sexual dysfunction, depression, multiple personality disorder), Horwitz shows how the advocacy groups, clinicians and especially the pharmaceutical industry promote the new disorders and are able to get them institutionalized into the psychiatric diagnostic nomenclature.

What sets this book apart from many others is that Horwitz is able to present a social constructionist argument without undermining the notion that there can be real biomedical disorders. This is an ambitious and precarious task for a sociologist, but Horwitz navigates these waters with rigor, intellectual grace and uncommon good sociological sense. This book is both an integrative study of the first order and a provocative and incisive piece of scholarship; it is a landmark study of psychiatric conceptions at the millennium.

Kerr, A., Shakespeare, T. Genetic Politics: from eugenics to genome. Cheltenham, New Clarion Press, 2002.

Nominated by Jane Sandall

Firstly, this is one of the few books in the area that places current developments in genetics in a socio-historical context. To me, it does what sociology does best and unlike many other books in the genre, this book does place developments in a wider societal perspective. It is readable, challenging and erudite and it is a book I can recommend to students. It is a rare book that can speak to a wide range of audiences, including sociological and professional, and this is one of them.

Klinenberg, E. Heat Wave: a social autopsy of disaster in Chicago. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 2002.

Nominated by Robert Dingwall

In July 1995 more than 700 people perished in a heat wave, making it one of the greatest natural disasters of American history. Eric Klinenberg goes inside the anatomy of the metropolis to conduct a "social autopsy," examining the social, political, and institutional organs of the city that made this urban disaster deadly. Starting with the question of why most victims died at home alone, Klinenberg investigates why some neighborhoods experienced greater mortality than others, how the city government responded to the crisis, and how journalists, scientists, and public officials reported on and explained these events. Through a combination of years of fieldwork, extensive interviews, and archival research - and writing with much of the verve of an investigative journalist, Klinenberg uncovers how a number of surprising and unsettling forms of social breakdown--including the isolation of seniors, the institutional abandonment of poor neighborhoods, and the retrenchment of public assistance programs--contributed to the high fatality rates. The heat wave mortality has as much social as natural origins. Working in the tradition of Emile Durkheim and Kai Erickson, Klinenberg's truly exceptional, innovative study promises to launch a new sociological research tradition that unites the methods and theories of medical sociology with the epidemiological research on social determinants of health.

The, A-M. Palliative Care and Communication: experiences in the clinic. Buckingham, Open University Press, 2002.

Nominated by David Clark

Written in an engaging style with extensive use of narrative, Palliative Care and Communication seeks explanations for the sense of optimism found among patients with small-cell bronchial carcinoma or lung cancer. Over a period of five years the author used ethnographic research methods to monitor the illness processes of patients from the time of receiving bad news until their death, from the perspectives of the various people involved: the patient, family and relatives, the doctors and nursing staff. Based on narrative descriptions, interspersed with observations, the author demonstrates 'why things happen the way they do in practice'. The book explores informal codes, ambiguous messages, the dilemma between professional detachment and personal involvement, patterns of information and communication during the phases of the illness, the latent realisation of approaching death, and the ambivalence of patients with regard to 'knowing and not knowing'. A first in its field, the book provides important information on a difficult subject in a clear and accessible fashion.
