

Are you interested in being a BSA Consumption Study Group convenor?

The BSA Consumption Study Group is looking for one or two new co-convenors to join Dr Alexandra Kviat

Since being re-launched in 2019, the Consumption Study Group has worked to provide a network through which researchers interested in consumption, consumers and consumer culture can showcase their research, exchange and develop ideas, and support each other. After a series of successful events in recent years, we are looking to expand our convenorship team to continue this work.

Key aspects of the role include:

- organising occasional Study Group events;
- maintaining the Study Group mailing list on JISCMail;
- liaising with the BSA, including representing the group at Study Group Convenor meetings (online) and writing a short annual report outlining Study Group activities;
- coordinating the Culture, Media, Sport, and Food Stream at the BSA Annual Conference.

The role is open to academics of any career stage. Please note that convenors must be BSA members and maintain their membership for the duration of their tenure in the role.

To apply, please send a short (up to 500 words) expression of interest, including a summary of your relevant experience and interests, and a brief outline of how you think you will be able to contribute to the group's development, to Dr Alexandra Kviat at a.kviat@bristol.ac.uk by 17 July.

Please note: the call may close early if all positions are filled before the deadline.
