Lecturer in Criminology

Reference: H-61054518-02

By joining our faculty, you will help prepare and develop entrant professionals joining the criminal justice system with the knowledge and expertise to make a significant difference to lives, communities and society.

Faculty / Directorate

The Division of Community and Criminal Justice is part of the School of Applied Social Sciences, one of four specialist schools, also including Leicester School of Allied Health Sciences, Leicester School of Nursing and Midwifery, and Leicester School of Pharmacy.

Role

We are looking to recruit a Lecturer in Criminology in the Division of Community and Criminal Justice. The role will be a teaching focused post on our undergraduate criminology programmes. Typically, your teaching duties will include preparation and delivery of lectures and seminars, supervision of final year projects, contributing to the personal tutoring scheme, and the devising and marking of assessments.

Ideal Candidate

You will hold a postgraduate qualification in Criminology or a relevant discipline. We would particularly welcome applications from those with specialisms in Victimology, Mental Health, or Peacebuilding Criminology although other specialisms will be considered. You will be familiar with delivering teaching and learning within a higher education setting. You will be able to demonstrate excellent organisational skills and the ability to communicate effectively with all members of the University community.

You will share DMU's passion to provide an outstanding and inclusive experience for all of its students.
